You Never Can Tell
Two New York women—and the story is told by one of them—were in the subway in Berlin, Germany, one afternoon last summer, says the New York Times. Both had just come to the German capital from London, where they had been among friends, had been showered with attentions, and had met some delightful Englishmen. They had been quite fascinated by London and everything English.

On getting to Berlin they found themselves somewhat of a novelty. The Englishmen they met were constantly comparing Germany with England, to the invariable disadvantage of the Fatherland.

On the afternoon in question a man and woman entered the subway car in which were the New Yorkers, taking the adjoining seats. The man was large, ruddy faced, with a straw hat in his hand, with which he waved about for the day was hot. The hat was the only thing he was carrying. The woman, obviously his wife, was short, stout, perspiring. She carried five large bundles and two small ones, arms and hands being entirely occupied with the load. The newcomers plumped down without exchanging a word.

The New Yorkers eyed the man with utter disdain, and then began to criticize him in English in anything but subdued voices.

"What a brute! Just like an overbearing German! He thinks women were made to serve men. Fancy his being such a pig as to make his wife do all the work of carrying those huge bundles! Isn't it disgusting? But what can you expect from a German? You'd never see an Englishman do a thing like that. And I just wish he could understand English, so as he'd know what we're saying. Pig! But neither the man nor his wife uttered an eyelash, so it seemed plain they knew nothing but their own language.

While the New Yorkers still vented their indignation a second man came in. He approached the man and woman with a smile and outstretched hand.

"How are you? Isn't it hot?" said he in the most English of English accents.

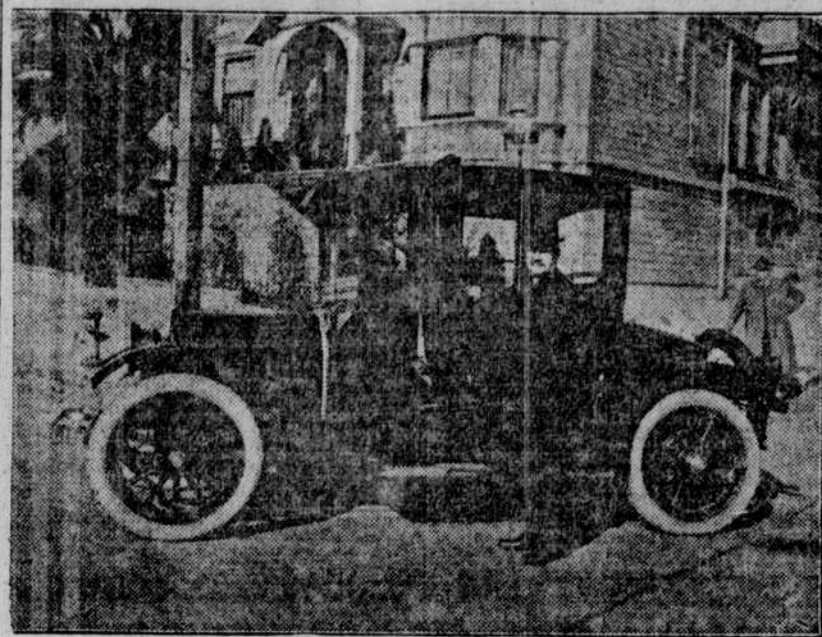

"Bally hot, indeed, by Jove!" was the response from the man with the straw hat, in a duplicate of the accent of the first speaker.

More Statues for India
From the Nottingham Guardian.
If British prestige in India depends on the number of statues erected in honor of Britain's great men—a hypothesis, by the way, which is open to considerable doubt—it ought to stand high in 1914. Early in the new year three new statues will reach India: one of General Sir Alexander Taylor, destined for Delhi; another of Lord Kitchener, for Calcutta; and a third of King Edward VII, for Rangoon.

The one of Lord Kitchener is a colossal equestrian statue by Sidney March, and is to be set up in Calcutta—that is, if it ever gets there, for so far his lordship and his charger have shown a distinct disinclination for the trip. At first they refused to be taken to the docks and all the king's horses and all the king's men couldn't get them there. Eventually they consented to embark just before the date of sailing, though whether recourse was had to Noah's traditional ark or not, getting the donkey to enter the ark did not transpire.

Saved by "Safety First" Badge

From the New York Sun.
Chicago.—A "safety first" button, of the sort commonly worn by employees of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, saved the life of a man in whose digestive organs it had lodged.

Harry Spieckerman of the general auditor's office of the railroad is a staunch believer in the doctrine of "safety first." He wore a pin and Thursday, while trying to straighten out the fastener with his teeth, accidentally swallowed the celluloid disk.

Dr. H. A. Moje, 422 North Ashland avenue, operated on Spieckerman in the Chicago Union hospital.

"I want that button when you get it," said A. W. Smullen, chairman of the safety first committee. "It's the first time a part of our organization has turned against us in this movement. As a traitor it should be dealt with accordingly."

The surgeon found that the patient's appendix had developed to three times its normal size and had hooked around the colon in such a manner as to jeopardize his life. Pin and appendix were removed at one time, and the former, justified at last by having furthered the cause for which it was ordained—saving lives—is to have a place of honor in the souvenir family of the committee.

"If Spieckerman had not swallowed this pin he probably would have been dead within 20 days," said the surgeon.

Equality, Fraternity

From the Tribune.
The gentleman who found himself pausing for thought when he saw the given name of his wife entered on the precinct registry list as "Jess" had come upon a new aspect of equality. It startled him, as it might any citizen who for years had been an amiable and unconscious trampler down of human rights, but probably it was prophetic.

Politics is colloquial and easy of habit. It promotes a ready "first name" familiarity. It may be sometime before a lady in office is known as "Fire Escape Sally," but possibly it's in the future, along with "Hot Stove Henrietta."

Before we arrive at such equality we suspect that the husband of an election official who hears an election judge call out "What count have you there, Bess?" will lead his wife home and take his consequences before the election board.

Nevertheless we approach political sophistication. A gentleman in the Twentieth ward found his wife working for a candidate whom he did not favor and swung for her chin in frank recognition of her rights as a voter and an equal.

The Safe Ones to Kid
From the St. Louis Republic.
"That joke you printed about your wife—did it make her angry?"

"Bless you, no. I spent a half hour trying to explain the point of it to her and finally got angry myself."

ELEMENT OF LUCK IN BRIDGE HIGH

Chess Described as the Perfect Game Because It Is 100 Per Cent Skill

It has long been admitted that the only blot on auction bridge was the fact that its luck percentage was too high, writes Florence Irwin in the April Strand. The man with all the high cards could take the stakes whether he played well or poorly; he could defeat superior players because he held the good cards against them. This was hard on the superior players; also it was the flattest kind of victory for the victor. No good sportsman wants to win on cards alone. Of course, expert players could make more on good hands and lose less on bad ones than inferior players. But not even experts could beat luck. Chess is a perfect game because it is 100 per cent skill and no percent luck—it depends on no throw of dice nor fall of cards; the fate of the chess player lies in his own hands. I have heard the luck and skill percentage of auction variously placed from 20 per cent skill and 80 per cent luck to 50 per cent for each. Personally, I should place it at 40 for skill and 60 for luck. Whatever it is, the luck percentage is admitted to be discouragingly high. Any movement which would lower it would be a boon to auction; it would dignify the game, raise it to the chess level and wipe out its only discouraging feature. "Planeta" hands (hands that play themselves) are not inspiring. With a long run of such hands on your own side your victory loses its savor—your winnings are a gift, and not an achievement; with a long run of such hands against you there is small pleasure in the game—all your efforts go for nothing, and the only thing you can do is to put up as good a fight as possible against the steam roller in the adversaries' hands. In spite of all your pluck you are flattened to a pancake. But when the game is neck and neck, when the play of every card is vital, then you get auction in its perfect form.

The DOCTOR'S ADVICE
by Dr. Lewis Baker

The questions answered below are general in character; the symptoms or diseases are given and the answers should apply to any case of similar nature.

Those wishing further advice, free, may address Dr. Lewis Baker, College Building, 67 E. Ellwood street, Dayton, O., enclosing self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply. Full name and address must be given, but only initials for fictitious name will be used in my answers. The prescriptions can be filled at any well-stocked drug store. Any druggist can order of wholesaler.

"Distress" writes: "My hair is so oily and straggling I wish you could tell me something to make it soft and fluffy. It makes me positively homely. I also have a great deal of dandruff."

Answer: Many women would be more beautiful if they had soft, fluffy hair. I can tell you a very simple remedy, one that will make your hair soft and fluffy. It will remove dandruff, itching scalp and lustreless and falling hair. Ask your druggist for a 4 oz. jar of plain yellow mineral oil and use according to directions and you will be surprised to note the difference in your hair.

"Fred W." writes: "Suffer with headache, indigestion, nervous debility and am also thin almost to the danger point. What can be done for me?"

Answer: You can very readily overcome these difficulties by using 3-grain hypo-nutrient tablets. These are highly recommended by physicians and if used according to directions you will soon be rid of headache, your indigestion will be gone and you will gain from 10 to 30 pounds. These tablets should be taken regularly for several months and I am confident you will gain to them.

"Lee" writes: "I have tried so many remedies for eczema that I am almost afraid to try any more. Can you tell me a sure remedy I will try?"

Answer: Do not be discouraged because you have not been able to find something that would overcome your rheumatism, for you can be relieved if you will take what I tell you. Get from the drug store: Iodine, 1/2 ounce; potassium, 2 grains; sodium salicylate, 4 grains; wine of colchicum, 1/2 oz.; comp. fluid balmwort, 1 oz.; comp. essence cardiol, 1 oz. and strip sarsaparilla, 5 oz. Mix and take a teaspoonful at meal-time and again before going to bed.

"Fern" writes: "I have suffered with a bad cough for some time and am also weak and tired most of the time, which I think is due to the severe coughing. Can you give me a remedy?"

Answer: Yes, your cough is due to the coughing, but you should be well relieved by using the following: Get a 25c. oz. package of essence menthol-haze and make according to directions on the bottle, then take a teaspoonful every hour or two until the cough is cured. This makes a full pint of the very best and safest cough syrup. If your druggist does not have menthol-haze, have him order it for you of the wholesale firm.

"Doctor," what can I take for a bad case of indigestion? I have suffered with it for many years and nothing I take helps at all. I am also bothered with constipation."

Answer: You should not neglect indigestion and constipation, as it leads to more serious trouble; very frequently appendicitis is caused by this neglect. Begin at once and take tablets triopentine. These are

ASK FOR SULPHUR TABLETS

What was grandmother's unexcelled remedy? Haven't you heard of it? Yes, you have! It was sulphur, cream of tartar and molasses. The main trouble with it was its nauseous taste.

A modern method puts the cream of tartar and sulphur into a sugar-coated tablet and mixes them with herbs, roots, etc., making a wonderful tonic blood purifier and system cleanser.

Just try Sulphur Tablets (not sulphur tablets), but Sulphur—remember the name—and get the tablets in sealed tubes at 50c per tube. Grown-up people and children who don't feel well, who are constipated or sluggish, or who have pimples, boils, carbuncles, ulcers and the like, can soon rid the system of these impurities by taking this good old-fashioned remedy in modern form. Their action satisfies or money is refunded by the Prescription Products Company, Dayton, Ohio. A free trial sent to any address. Buy of any well-stocked druggist.
